- 1 This contribution contains an edition and brief discussion of a legal record – a summons to court – from the archive of the Egibi family. The text dates late in the reign of Darius I and mentioning a high-ranking Persian official by the name of Artappanu (Greek Artapanos), who was to preside of the court proceedings. After reviewing the pertinent evidence, the author concludes that it is unlikely that this official can be identified with known bearers of the names, such as Artapanos, son of Artasyras, an important military commander during the reign of Xerxes.
